Why should you not, when he is so if returned Alice, innocently. Harry turned his head to conceal a smile, which the naivete of the reply had called forth, muttering to himself as he did so, 'Poor Crane! After a few minutes' silence, Alice began abruptly---

I'm sure I ought to feel very much obliged to you, Mr. Coverdale; and indeed I do; this is the second really good natured thing you've done by me

The tone in which she spoke so completely betrayed the surprise which was the feeling uppermost in his mind, that Harry, slightly annoyed, could not help replying---You did not, then, give me credit for possessing the least particle of good nature.

Alice smiled, as she answered If I had a proper degree of faith in Arthur's representations, I need not have felt surprise.

The delicate irony of this reply was not lost upon Coverdale; but lie knew that he had deserved it, and with the ready frankness, which was one of his best characteristics, he hastened to acknowledge it.

Thave certainly done little towards practically vindicating the character your prother's partiality has bestowed apon me, he said; but I must be allowed to plead in justification, that I was quite aware of my own deficiencies, and told Arthur that I had been roughing it abroad so long, that was totally unfit for ladies' society He would not admit the excuse ; but it was a full, true and sufficient one, nevertheless.

As he uttered the last words, a dazzling flash of lightning appeared almost to envelope them, followed instantaneously by a deafening peal of thunder. Half blinded by the flash, the frightened horses stopped abruptly, then terrified at the prolanged thunder, tried to turn short around. Foiled in this attempt by the skill and promptitude of their driver, they began rearing and plung ing in a way which threatened every moment to overturn the phaeton. Fortunately the road happened to be unusually wide at this point, and Harry, who never, throughout the whole affair in the slightest degree lost his presence of mind, deciding that whatever night most thoroughly frighten the horses, would create the impulse they would oventually obey, determined to try the effect of a litly, standing up, he began to adminis the whip to their sleek sides with a degree of strength and determination which contrasted with the mild and timid driving to which they were accust med, so astonished the animals, that bounding forward, with a snatch which tried the soundness of their harness, they dashed off at a furious gallop; at the same moment, a second peal of thunder, even louder than the preceding one, increased their ularm to such a degree, that Coverdale, despite of his utmost efforts, found it completely beyond his power to control them.

CHAPTER VII.

HARRY CONDESCENDS TO PLAY THE AGREEABLE.

Miss Hazelhurst ! Alice! are you mad? only sit still, and don't go and seream or anything, and all will come right.

Thus appealed to, or rather commanded, for the tone of the speaker's woice was unmistakably imporative, Alice, who, when the horses bolted, had half risen from her seat, and in an agony of terror, glanced round, as though she meditated making an actempt to jump out, shrank back again and covering her eyes with her hands, remained perfectly still and motionless, thus enabling Coverdale to devote his whole attention to the horses. The terrified animals after galloping nearly a mile, their fears being kept alive by repeated flashes of lightening and peals of thunder. while a perfect deluge of rain converted the dusty road beneath their feet into a morass, at length begon to relax their speed. As soon as Harry perceived this to be the case, he turned to his companion, saying, There, Miss Hazelhurst, I've got them in hand again, and the worst of the storm is over, too, so you needn't be frightened any longer; you have behaved like a--(regular brick was the simile that rose to his lips, but he refrained, and substituted) --- complete heroine, since you overcame that slightly insane impulse to commit suicide by jumping out.' Thus reassured, Alice ventured to uncover her eyes, and the first use she made of them was to fix them upon the countenance of her companion, striving to read therein whether the hopes with which he sought to inspire her were true or false. But Harry's was a face about which there could be no mistake; truth and honesty were written in every feature so legibly that the veriest tyro in physiognomy could not fail at once to perceive them. How fortunate it was that you wore driving, and not Mr. Crane, were the first words Alice uttored; We should have been everturated to a cercainty, if all horses had behaved so ton of country in the estimation of the tale morning. I'll take good care no agriculturalist.

There is, however, a dismal and gloomy ly you managed them when they were plunging and rearing. I should never have direct to whip them when they were in that follows state, but it answered capitally.

The Paily Rews. NEWPORT:

Published every morning (Sundays excepted)
BY GEORGE T. HAMMOND, At 123 Thames Street:

THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1859.

Correspondence of the News, Mr. Epitor. I do not know w! ether the following communication will prove accaptable to the columns of your valuable paper, or produce any pleasing sensation to your numerous renders; yet, as there are many delightful associations attached to the history of this little town, I think that it may be gratifying to many.

It is a fact, that Little Compton, has not heen very popular, or much known upon the great map of the universe. She has not hitherto furnished the world any great occasion for extending her renown to the distant quarters of the earth; but we boldly venture to compare her with any other town of her size in the Union. Were we called upon to assign our reasons, we could give them in a few words-for she is, and has been, eminently distinguished for the love of law, of liberty, and the doctrines of toleration in matters of religion; ensuring to every person freedom of thought and freedom of action.

Little Compton formerly belonged to Massachusetts, but was set off to Rhode Island in the year 1746. It is beautifully located in the South-east corner of the state. The east passage of the Narragansett washes its western borders and empties into the Atlantic on the south, with its ponderous waves coming in contact with the shaggy rock, whose battlements are hard to overcome.

This town consists in a population of about 1475 inhabitants and was settled soon after the close of King Philip's War, in 1676, by emigrants from the Island of he mounted the wall, a musket ball from Rhode Island, and Plymouth Colony. There are a few things in this place that attract the attention of strungers and they in a shameful manner put a bayonet others, from the fact that here repose the ashes of many of the first settlers of the country, which spots are marked by the stones brought from the land of their fathers, among which are the remains of Mrs. Elizabeth Pabodie, the first white female person born in America, in 1623. Her maiden name was Alden. On her tomb stone may be found the following inscription, verbatim et literatim :---

"Here lyeth the Body of Elizabeth, the the wife of William Pabodie, who dyed May ye 31-1717, and in her 94th year of her age."

By her side lies the body of her husband with the following:

"Here lyeth Buried ye Body of William Pabodie, who departed this life December ye 13th -1507, in the 88 year of his age." Here, too, is the grave of the celebrated warrior, Col. Benja nin Church, whose history is well known to almost every school boy. The bodies of Church and his wife Alice, are buried side by side, and covered with a state table stone, pieces of which have been extracted by the numerous visitors, and carried to parts unknown. On their tomb stones may be found the following inscriptions and spelling:

"Here beth intered the Body of the Honorable Col. Benjamin Church, Esq. who departed this life January ye 17th, 1717-8 in ye 78 year of his age,"

That of his wife reads as follows:--"Here lyeth interrea the Body of Alice Church fate wife to the Honorable Col. Benjamin Church Esq., she discenst March ye 5th, A, D, 1718-9 in ye 73 year of her

It has been a course of great perplexity to many literary men, as well as many others, to explain the above dates as inurified, but the following may enlighte their minds upon the subject. In the year 1589, under Pope Gregory, the year commenced on the 25th of Murch, and so continued unth 1752, when the legislature or England shortened the preceding year, 1751, a full quarter, and established the new year on the first of January instead of the 25th of

After that, the year was frequently writ ten with an additional figure, to represent the old and new method, when an occurence teck place between the first day of January new style, and the 25th of March old style. Thus Col. Church dying between the new and old type it is the new and old style, it is represented 1717-8 to express 1717 and 18, that is he died in 1717 by the out style, and 1718 the new style; his wife died in 1718 a Lynn farmer for a suit of clothes, and instyle, and in 1719 under the new.

Leaving this, our attention is attracted to your beautiful Island, and healthy city of Newpore in full view. Such splendid farms, neatly and systematically enclosed with stone walls, are sufficient to engage the attention of the most carcless observer; citizens and "lasted within an inch of his while the soil made rich with abundance him.

Post Office," which arose from the following fuct: -A Mr. Taggart was residing on the Island during part of the time the British held possession of Newport, Mr. Taggart would correspond with the Americans in Little Compton and Tiverton, and give them a concise statement of the standing a guard was constantly kept by John Bull, while a number of his Britanic Majesty's ships were moored at different stations to cut off any communication whatever from the main land, Mr. Taggart would write a letter, giving all necessary particulars, and deposit it under this mak, in the stillness of the night; he would then place a light where it would denote that he had something at the Post Office worthy of attention. Uncle Sam's boys would then man the bout, and with muffled ours, pass the war ships and go to the Post Office. This continued for some length of time, until the British became suspicious, when he left the Island and came over to Little Compton, where he performed guard duty until he was inhumanly killed as follows:-He was stationed as sentinel near Seaconnett. Point, on the east side of the Cove, at the Breakwater, when suddenly and unexpectedly the enemy's barge turned round the point where the breakwater now is. Taggart gave the alarm and fought the barge's company manfully for some time, when they effected a landing and ran for him; he then attempted to escape by jumping over a wall, but unfortunately for him, as the anamous statement in a musket ball from the anamous statement in the ground plending for his life, they in a shameful manner put a bayonet through his body, and then retreated to their barge and were off before a sistance arrived. Thus ended his useful life, to the disgrace of the British. Uncle Sam never shad arrangementation, onergotte and enterprising "Post Master," since the founding of the Past Office Department, than this of the Post Office Department, than this Rock Postmaster.
